Image Line Sawyer Vintage ModelingÂ .[Establishment of a cell line of TUNEL-positive cells in "Suzakumab-induced hepatocyte steatosis"]. The pathogenesis of liver failure associated with non-alcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD) is poorly understood. Hepatocyte steatosis has been believed to initiate apoptosis of hepatic cells. To analyze the mechanism of hepatocyte apoptosis in NAFLD, we have established a TUNEL-positive cell line from "Suzakumab-induced hepatocyte steatosis". Suzuki et al. recently reported that non-alcoholic fatty liver disease mouse model mouse (NASH) exhibited elevated expression of TNF-alpha and activated caspase-3. Suzuki et al. then introduced anti-TNF-alpha antibody as a therapeutic agent for NASH and reported that the drug significantly reduced steatosis and also improved serum ALT and AST. We consider that Suzuki et al. may have produced a NASH model by administering Suzuki et al. administered anti-TNF-alpha antibody. Based on Suzuki et al.'s findings, we investigated the possibility of hepatocyte apoptosis in liver biopsy specimens from NASH patients before and after treatment with anti-TNF-alpha antibody. We found many TUNEL-positive cells in the specimens and pretreatment with anti-TNF-alpha antibody significantly decreased TUNEL-positive cells. We then established a cell line of TUNEL-positive cells and confirmed the down-regulation of TNF-alpha in that cell line. The mechanism of NAFLD development may be closely related to an inflammatory response. Thus, the development of drug therapy for NAFLD may be an effective therapeutic strategy.
