The SETI@home network now runs well a whole year! Set up up a graph showing the amount of time your machine works and use the "total time" to infer how many weeks of those hours were used on s/w's in SETI@home. I've had my computer on for about a week and it looks like close to 18.06hrs and I worked over 1000 months! Mon, 25 Jul 2019 01:01:48

Amino acid sequence of equid herpesvirus 1 glycoprotein B. The amino acid sequence of the equid herpesvirus 1 glycoprotein B was determined by the automated Edman degradation of the purified protein. The polypeptide contains 150 amino acids and has an Mr of 17,500. Sequence analysis showed a strong homology to the glycoprotein B's from other herpesviruses. The amino acid sequence is well-conserved among this family of glycoproteins. A primary translation product of the L gene has a molecular weight of 22,000 and is smaller than the product of the H gene product of 22,500. This is most likely due to in vitro termination of translation.

the platform is a purposeful device to maintain a base of goodwill, but from the user's point of view, the platform is just an enabler. The popular cloud storage service, Box, offers users the ability to use its Dropbox-like service in a variety of third-party environments. However, what Box is doing in the cloud is not replicating the sort of richness of content and access you would have in a desktop client, a traditional PC, or a Mac. What they are doing, is setting up a network of storage and file transport pipes to enable that kind of access through the developer's software libraries. Box's desktop app itself is not their product. It's simply the tool that enables their platform in the various ways that their customers need and request. What Box offers is a simple, convenient platform that encourages collaboration and productivity. Amazon S3 was able to do this using a single, simple, scalable, reliable, less expensive cloud platform. We realize Box is providing a lot of value, but if the value adds to the end-user product as well, we can still beat their price. So far, Box's success is essentially a catalog of plugins and apps. This does not even begin to replicate the rich programs and libraries that we have for desktop computing. If you follow the notebook computing path, you already have a wide variety of desktop applications that you can use. For example, are you using OpenOffice? OpenOffice is a desktop application that offers a rich set of functionality for those users that need to stay in the office. However, it also offers functionality for users that want to work at home, as well as in the cloud. It

Reproductive outcome in women treated with oocyte recovery or oocyte cryopreservation. To evaluate factors affecting reproductive outcome, including those related to the fertility of retrieved oocytes and the fresh/frozen transfer cycle. Retrospective chart review. Tertiary referral center. One hundred seventy-five consecutive infertile women undergoing fertility preservation, either for cancer treatment or for oocyte retrieval. Oocyte retrieval followed by transfer or cryopreservation. Implantation and clinical pregnancy rates were calculated for the fresh/frozen transfer cycle per women and per oocyte. A total of 238 fresh cycles were performed, resulting in 18 live births. In the cryopreservation cycle (frozen-thawed transfer), 239 cycles were performed, resulting in 16 live births. The rates of premature ovulation, fertilization failure, and chemical, cytological, and vital pronuclei transfer blastocysts were 53.4%, 42.2%, and 89.0%, respectively, for the fresh/frozen transfer cycle, compared with 73.7%, 13.0%, and 29.6%, respectively, for the cryopreservation cycles. Despite no statistical difference in oocyte retrieval rates (80.0% for cryopreservation vs 78.3% for fresh/frozen transfer), implantation rates were higher for the fresh/frozen transfer cycle (32.2% vs 14.7%). The pregnancy rates per fresh (14.6%) and frozen cycles (12.8%) were similar to those of published literature. The transfer cycle had a significantly longer mean stimulation time (7.0 +/- 1.2 days vs 5.9 +/- 1.1 days) as well as longer mean time to oocyte retrieval (10.3 +/- 1.0 days vs 5.9 +/- 1.1 days). It is important
