Star Traders: 4X Empires Game Review

The early 1780s marked the beginning of the end for the best of both worlds the United States and the United Kingdom were living in for the past half-century. In fact, a great war brought together all of the colonies into one republic for the first time and created a world economy that would change the dynamics of the Trans-Atlantic Colonialist rivalry forever. It is now the turn of the United States to save itself from the combined might of it's Colonialist rivals, the two superpowers of Colonialism as we know it.

The newly formed United States has not remained in the shadows of its English and French rivals, however. Instead, the republic has emerged as the driving economic and military force of the Atlantic Ocean. One of the greatest success stories of the early 1800s, it was this move that would make William Shakespear's famous quote around 2000 years before Christmas one and one that any of my kids will remember,"Lord, when will this day of judgement come?".

Now, it is my turn to ask when will you be ready?! Why? The answer is easy. You see, deep inside, everyone believes that the end of time is just round the corner. Perhaps it is by happenstance or maybe it is the result of a natural disaster. It could be a war, a plague or even a series of plagues, a comet hitting the planet and a lot more things. In fact, doomsday prophecies have existed for thousands of years!

While the end of time seems inevitable it is not. You can help prevent the apocalypse by setting yourself on the track to succeed in your missions. Why?

I like the Viking name for my new edition as well. "Hi, my name is Bambikka." No wait, that didn't work! Next - "Ooh, thanks, Bambikka. I hope your big back side is up to the job of pressing the button."
