You can create an image in Photoshop, save it, and then open that image back in the program later. This is called creating a "photocopy," and it's common when you want to make changes to your image. You can then edit, duplicate, and resize the image as you see fit before saving and closing the file. Creating a document A document is Photoshop's "working file" — a place where you save your Photoshop document to where you can store your work. The document provides a convenient place to store the various layers of the image in case you need to work on them again later on. By saving an image as a document, you are saving the changes you make within the document itself rather than adding the image to an existing document and making additional edits. To begin creating a document, you can either open a file that you have saved somewhere outside of your computer or create a blank document using the File⇒New command. At the main Photoshop window, click the New button in the main menu bar to open the New Document dialog box (see the bottom of Figure 16-1). If you don't see the New Document dialog box, click the New button at the top of the window. Image courtesy of Corel Corporation The New Document dialog box offers the following options: • File: When you click this option, the Open dialog box appears, giving you a choice of any of the documents you have opened and saved in your computer or on the current server in the Open dialog box. You can also create a new file by selecting the folder containing the document you want to save and selecting New at the top of the Open dialog box. • Size: Choose from nine standard sizes for the image, including Letter, Legal, A4, and so on, or create a custom size. For example, if you have an image of a relatively large, detailed image that you want to fit on a page, you can choose Letter size to fit the image into a standard business-size letter. But if you have an image of a small detail, you can save the image as small size to save the file size. After choosing a size, click OK to return to the New Document dialog box. • Location: Click the Current Folder option or the Browse button to navigate to the folder where you want to save the document. Click the New Folder option to navigate to a new folder. Click the current location or the Browse button to

Q: Convert a string that contains the relative path to an absolute path, in C# I am retrieving a list of files from a folder location that looks something like: MyApplication\ApplicationData\Resolved Folders\File.txt When I get the string, I need to convert it to a real absolute path. I can get the path like: string path = ConfigurationManager.AppSettings["LogsFolder"]; Then the output will look like this: C:\Users\Michael\AppData\Local\Application Data\Resolved Folders\File.txt The user will eventually use the same application in their Windows 10 PC at work. Therefore, there is no \CompanyName\LocalPath like in the first example. I need to get a string that represents: C:\Users\Michael\AppData\Local\Application Data\Resolved Folders\File.txt I need to know how to convert it in C#. Thanks in advance! A: Since your drive is Local, I can think of 2 ways: 1) string path = ConfigurationManager.AppSettings["LogsFolder"]; 2) string path = Environment.ExpandEnvironmentVariables(ConfigurationManager.AppSettings["LogsFolder"]); Seems that 1) will cause filename globbing (like *.txt will look for all text files while 2) will simply return the path.
