Bring baked mac-and-cheese to another level of comfort food by stuffing the pasta with more pasta! A crown of crunchy cheese cracker crumbs doesn't hurt.My DD had constipation until recently. Thats when I started researching and doing the Kegel exercises. So far it helps a lot. I am just starting to show. So I am excited! Michelle 08-09-2012, 11:58 PM Love to new mommy Hahahaha! This is funny!! :) Michelle 08-09-2012, 11:59 PM Jill 05-21-2012, 03:51 AM Congratulations on the pregnancy, M. Once you start showing, you will begin to notice that your belly hangs between your knees and your feet. During your pregnancy, your belly will slowly separate from your hips. You may notice this during your prenatal class, or any other class that will have you turn your belly to your partners during the lecture. The last time I had an OB was a lecture at a breastfeeding class, but they were asking if anybody had any questions about breast feeding. I remember telling her that I wondered if they'd touch my tummy while the baby is in the womb. Her response was, "Not to worry, your belly will get big enough and when you're about 6-8 months, your belly will separate from your hips and you'll just look like your pregnant by then." I was shocked, because before this I didn't really notice anything; now I have a goober of a tummy :) Good luck! Michelle 05-21-2012, 03:51 AM Mia 05-23-2012, 06:44 PM Aww congrats by the way everyone on the pregnancy! Michelle 05-23-2012,

Vuze.The three new binding sites, identified by analogy, are activated by cytosolic calcium, induce conformational changes in their receptor, and interact with both detergent and receptor. In contrast to the other three sites, these three new sites display different selectivity and in addition appear to interact with the receptor in two unique ways. They will be studied using high affinity site-specific 3'-methoxypolyethylene glycol photoaffinity probes and conventional photoaffinity crosslinking studies. It is the aim of this proposal to characterize the recognition event(s) which define the site, the receptor(s) responsible, and the perturbation of such recognition events which occurs when the site becomes occupied. In the course of characterizing the sites, the effect of the site occupation on ligand specificity will be defined and the crosslinking studies will be extended to find out whether or not the occupied sites interact with one or more of the five sites already known to exist on the receptor. Recent data suggests that the 45% decrease in affinity upon occupancy of the two sites described here might be due to allosteric interaction with either the second site or one of the five sites already identified. If indeed such an allosteric interaction exists, it is the goal of the proposed studies to determine whether it is due to direct interaction with one or more of these five sites. Occupation of the second site may provide a means to control receptor specificity, perhaps by "programming" the receptor to respond to a specific stimulus. Characterization of the second site will help define the role of such an allosteric interaction. Occupation of either site by amphiphilic or poly
