The Russian president has said his country has no plans to place Syrian President Bashar Assad on trial or to prosecute him, adding that he believes the Syrian leadership does not want him to be brought to justice. Putin said during a press conference that the UN investigation into the alleged use of chemical weapons in Syria, ordered last week by the Syrian government, is too slow and is not acting fast enough to save lives. "There is only one way to resolve the situation in Syria, and that is through a political process. Only a political process can end the hostilities and normalize the situation there. And we all know that the UN Security Council and the international community in general is clearly not interested in this,"
